pupil, but soon became an assistant to his master. In 1785 he set up a studio of his own in London, achieving marked popularity and financial success. He visited Ireland in 1788, where he was received with great favor, and painted the portraits of many distinguished persons. He returned to America in 1792.

Among his sitters in Europe were Louis XVI, George III and George IV, while Prince of Wales. He also painted Alderman Boydell, John Kemble, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Benjamin West and many distinguished artists. The six presidents of the United States who sat to him for their portraits were George Washington, John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, James Monroe and John Quincy Adams.

His portrait of Sir Ashley Cooper, the sixth Earl of Shaftesbury, in the Toledo Museum, was painted in Washington, D. C., in 1799. Sir Ashley's grandfather was the Ashley Cooper who obtained the grant of the State of South Carolina, which he proposed to develop solely in his personal interest, but for some reason failed to carry out his plans. 45. Notre Dame, Paris.

England

WALTER GREAVES.

Walter and Henry Greaves were pupils and close companions of Whistler as far back as 1863. The father of the Greaves boys was a boat builder in Chelsea. He had rowed Turner about on the river as his two sons were later to row Whistler. The Greaves boys idolized their master and apparently had but little thought of themselves and their own talents. Walter Greaves has lived quietly all these years in Chelsea in comparative obscurity. In 1911, when he was seventy years of age, an exhibition of his works was brought together in the Goupil Galleries, London, and the news was flashed throughout the world that a master as great as Whistler himself had received tardy recognition. Walter Greaves' style is very similar to that of Whistler, and yet it has unusual charm and great qualities all its own. Some two years before Walter Greaves was "discovered" to the world, Mr. Carl B. Spitzer, of Toledo, rummaging about in an old London book shop, found a striking portrait of Whistler in oil signed by Greaves. Recognizing its importance, he purchased it and presented it to the Toledo Museum of Art. Aside from its artistic excellence, it is also one of the most interesting and valuable portraits of Whistler in existence.

46. Portrait of James McNeill Whistler. Gift of C. B. Spitzer.

68. The Weaver. Gift of Harry E. King.

PAVEL D. SCHMAROFF.

Member of the Imperial Academy of Arts, St. Petersburg, Russia. His "Lady in Carriage" was awarded a Gold Medal at the St. Louis Exposition. The pietnre, which is most interesting teehnically, shows a lady in black driving in a Victoria on the crowded boulevard. It is the impression of a second, the wink of an eye. The swish of the boulevard is indicated swiftly, but surely, with a few strokes of the brush. Christian Brinton, the eminent critic, in an article in the Booklover's Magazine, writes of Schmaroff's brilliant, fluent handling and exquisite melting tonality. "In his Lady in Carriage," says the writer, "the artist enters the ultra modern and modish sphere of existence with equal felicity. His work reveals the easy mastery of our latter day apostles of Velasquez without the least sacrifice of Slavic flavor."

69. Lady in Carriage. Gift of A. M. Chesbrough.

S M. SEIDENBERG.

Member of the Imperial Academy of Arts, St. Petersburg, Russia. His painting, "The Plowers," was shown at the St. Louis Exposition under the title, "Episode in the Reign of Roman Galitsky." The Prince of Red Russia, returning from a successful campaign against Lithuania, brought home an enormous number of Lithuanian prisoners, whom he caused to be treated like cattle, yoking them to crude wooden plows. The picture shows three men and a woman, driven afield like beasts, hitched with shackled hands and feet to the plow, or ralo, as it was called. Christian Brinton, writing of this painting in the Booklovers' Magazine for February, 1906, says: "For strength of handling, coupled with a moving sense of nature and a profound appreciation of dumb agony and forbearance, it would be difficult to excel Seidenberg's canvas."

70. The Plowers. Gift of Albion E. Lang.

V. P. VERESTCHAGIN.

Member of the Imperial Academy of Arts, Russia. His painting, "The Golden Cloud," was shown in the Russian section at the St. Louis Exposition. It illustrates a passage in the poem entitled "The Cliff," by the Russian poet, Lermontoff. A cloud has rested on the mountain top during the night, and now, bathed in the gold of the morning sun, it floats gently away, leaving the mountain sad and dejected.

71. The Golden Cloud. Gift of A. M. Chesbrough.

I. A. VELTZ.

Member of the St. Petersburg Society of Artists. One of the Russian painters represented in the Russian section of the St. Louis Exposition.

72. Valley of the Dneiper. Gift of A. M. Chesbrough.

Germany

FRANZ LENBACH.

Born at Schrobenhausen, Bavaria, 1836. Pupil of Munich Academy. Member of Berlin Academy. Medals, Paris Salon, 1867; Munich, 1879; Vienna, 1882; Spanish Order of St. Charles, 1869. His portraits of Bismark and Moltke are in the National Gallery, Berlin. Painted Wagner, Liszt, Emperors of Germany and Austria and many other notables.

73. Portrait of Mrs. H. Lent by Rev. R. D. Hollington.

JANUARIUS ZICK.

Born in 1733 in Munich. He was at first a pupil of his father, Johann Zick, but in 1757 he went to Basle and then to Rome. On his return he was, in 1761, appointed court painter at Coblentz. He also painted extensively in the churches of Upper Swabia and in Biberach. He died at Ehrenbreitstein in 1797.

74. The Crown of Thorns. Gift of J. G. Moulton.

SALVATOR ROSA.

Born near Naples, Italy, in 1615. When but eighteen years of age, he associated with and studied the bandits, and many compositions from his brush deal with the exciting experiences incident to their career. He was noted as a painter of battle scenes, his figures being full of movement and expression.

George Bellows, N. A.

George Bellows was born at Columbus, Ohio, in 1882. He belongs to a group of artists known as the Independents, who left the academic school feeling the limitations. When Bellows went to New York seven years ago, he became the protege of Robert Henri with whom he has since been closely associated. Bellows' work is bold, yet dignified simplicity is the chief characteristic of his painting. He is pre-eminently a modern painter whose art is wholly freed from the narrow limits of conventionalism. Thus he paints following only his own fancy and keenly sensitive to all that suggests life.

F. Ballard Williams, N. A.

F. Ballard Williams was born at Brooklyn in 1872 and pursued his art studies at the New York Academy of Design. He has received many honors and is represented in many important collections.

His pictures are filled with emotion, for to him, tone means everything. Unlike many painters, he does not get results by any obvious methods, his is a perfect knowledge of color and its relations, a knowledge which will not allow him to introduce one discordant note into his exquisite and perfect harmonies.

W. Elmer Schofield, N. A.

W. Elmer Schofield was born at Philadelphia in 1867. He was a pupil of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts and later studied in Paris under Bouguereau, Doucet, Ferrier and Aman-Jean. He has been the recipient of many honors and is represented in almost all of the important collections in the United States. Mr. Schofield takes the simple things in nature and invests them with a wonderful glory. His winter landscapes are particularly charming, he is always honest in his method, behind which is observation, sentiment, poetry, knowledge and an engaging technique.

Bror Julius Olsson Nordfeldt

Bror Julius Olsson Nordfeldt was born at Scania, Sweden, in 1878, coming with his parents to the United States to live when thirteen years of age. His early art training was secured in Chicago at the Art Institute; this instruction was later supplemented by study abroad.

Mr. Nordfeldt paints as well as etches and his wood block prints are worthy of special notice, for in these the artist must design his own pictures, cut his own blocks and be his own printer.

An entire set of Nordfeldt's work was exhibited by invitation at the International Exposition in Rome, Italy, during the summer of 1911.
